'Real progress will take time'

WIKKI WALL may well be part of the narrative of the most unforgettable year in Irish female sporting history, but she is not blinded to the reality that her gender still has a fight on their hands to secure equality.

While Meath's stunning victory in winning the All-Ireland LGFA championship just nine months after stepping up from the second tier — in the process beating five-in-a-row chasing Dublin — was a collective effort, Wall's thundering display in the final has ensured she is very much part of the sporting collage of heroines that include the likes of Rachel Blackmore, Kelly Harrington and Leona Maguire.

She was honoured this week with the PwC player of the month for August, while it is safe to assume that the annual player of the year award has already been inscribed with her name.

While she admits that her Meath team being mentioned as those who have excelled on an international stage is flattering, she is adamant that a female sporting year for the ages should not be confused for parity of esteem and respect for her gender.

'To have the Meath team included in that narrative is completely unbelievable.

'There have been huge strides taken in female sport for women in Ireland, but we are definitely not there yet when you see the conditions the Connacht rugby team were getting changed in before a match outside in a tent.

'There are huge positives but I am always caught in two minds almost, on one being so positive about women in sport in Ireland and then on the other you have to look at those things are still going on in 2021,' admitted Wall.

And that battle for equality within the Gaelic football family continues. While there have been some progress, most notably in the equalisation of government grant funding for inter-county players and the amalgamation of the WPGA with the GPA — which has ensured that it falls under the PwC sponsored award schemes — the bottom line is that for the LGFA and Camogie players, there is literally a price to be paid playing at an elite level.

'For us the bare minimum is expenses,' she insists.

'We are lucky in Meath in that a lot of us don't live too far away but there are other counties where players have to travel across the country to go to training and to be out of pocket is not good enough at this stage.

'There have been expenses provided this year for league and championship matches so that is definitely a step in the right direction and maybe that can be amplified in the next year.

'That is something I would like

Class act: Vikki Wall gets the player of the month award to see happen,' added Wall. However, for that to become financially sustainable it would almost certainly require the two female codes to come under the GAA umbrella; a process still hampered by reluctance at leadership level.

'In my opinion, it does have to happen. It is the only natural progress that can come along. I think it will take a bit of time unfortunately,' said Wall, who has returned to college this week to complete the final year of her masters in digital marketing at DCU.

'I don't think it is going to happen overnight but I do think it has to happen eventually.'
