BIG AMBITIONS: Tyson Fury wants Oleksandr Usyk (below) next

D-DAY FOR MEGAFIGHT

TYSON FURY'S hopes of facing Oleksandr Usyk for the undisputed heavyweight crown are set for a make-or-break 48 hours.

■ Chris McKENNA
If there is no deal in place for Fury to fight Usyk or Whyte tomorrow, then his team will go ahead with the WBC purse bids.

The Gypsy King's team have been in talks with Usyk's since November about staging the clash for all four titles in Saudi Arabia this spring. But it is crunch time, with a decision expected before the end of tomorrow. The main stumbling block is Anthony Joshua and Dillian Whyte agreeing deals to step aside to allow the bout to happen. As StarSport first revealed last week, Joshua is believed to want in the region of €18m - and a shot at the winner - to walk away from his contracted rematch with WBA, IBF and WBO champion Usyk.

That will end any hope of Fury facing Usyk for all the belts next and all focus will turn to his mandatory challenger Whyte, most likely at the end of March or April. Fury's ambition is to become the first undisputed world heavyweight champion since Lennox Lewis in 1999. But the guarantee of funds from Saudi Arabia also has to be in place before everything can fall into line.

Path

Whyte is mandatory for Fury's WBC title and talks are still ongoing between his team and the Briton's promoters Frank Warren and Bob Arum about a deal for that fight. However, Whyte is also willing to accept in the region of €6m to give up his mandatory shot but wants assurances on his path to a shot at the title down the road.

SÉAMUS MAKES HISTORY

■ Don MARRINAN
SÉAMUS O'CONNOR will become the first Irish athlete to compete at three Winter Olympic Games in Beijing next month. "It's an incredible honour to be heading into my third Olympic Games. I was the flagbearer for the last Games (Pyeongchang 2018), and that was one of the most memorable moments in my life," said halfpipe snowboarder O'Connor (24), who lives in Utah. "I feel privileged to be able to compete in Beijing, and am really looking forward to getting to spending time with my teammates, and to what the next few weeks will bring." Six athletes have been selected for the Games in total. The selection also includes Tess Arbez and Jack Gower (both Alpine skiing), Thomas Maloney Westgaard (cross-country skiing), Brendan 'Bubba' Newby (freestyle skiing) and Elsa Desmond (luge).
