Kroenke's true love on brink of Super Bowl glory

Arsenal owner's heart is firmly with his LA Rams

ARSENAL owner Stan Kroenke was anything but silent after watching his beloved Los Angeles Rams reach a second Super Bowl in four years.

Wearing a white NFC 'Conference Champions' cap and blue suit, the 74-year-old stood on the turf of the gleaming $4-billion SoFi Stadium and gushed.

The Rams had beaten the San Francisco 49ers, booking a return to the world's most expensive stadium to face the Cincinnati Bengals tomorrow.

'We worked on this project for a number of years and it's wonderful to see it come to fruition,' he told NFL Network. 'Reaching the big game in our house means a lot. We are proud of it.'

At the last count, Kroenke was worth $19bn. The Super Bowl is expected to earn Los Angeles $350m. But he is perceived as less extravagant with time and money when it comes to Arsenal.

The last the Gunners heard from their reclusive owner was an open letter in August, published in the programme before this season's home opener. His previous visit to the Emirates Stadium came in May 2018 for Arsene Wenger's final home game as manager.

Boss Mikel Arteta flew to Denver last month - home of the NBA's Nuggets and NHL's Colorado Avalanche, both in the Kroenke stable - to get the green light to offload Pierre-Emerick Aubameyang.

hands-off, absentee approach has long irked Arsenal fans but his unpopularity reached new lows last year. After April's botched attempt to become a founding member of the European Super League, protesters burned an effigy of the American.

The next month, Spotify supremo Daniel Ek saw his bid to buy Arsenal rebuffed. Kroenke released a statement saying the club was not for sale.

Uncharacteristically, the Gunners spent £142m last summer - the highest outlay in European football. But, since Kroenke bought an initial 9.9 per cent stake in Arsenal in 2007 (he took complete control in August 2018), the club's stature has waned. The previous year they reached the Champions League final, a competition they played in for 19 straight seasons until 2017. Nowadays they can't even qualify for the Europa League.

Yet if Arsenal have declined, it is little compared to events in St Louis, the Rams' former home. All that is left of the team in that Missouri city is a dilapidated stadium and memories of the side who won the Super Bowl in 2000.

Kroenke bought the Rams for $550m in 2010. Eight years ago, he purchased 60 acres of land in Inglewood, Los Angeles, for £75m. Further land purchases in nearby Hollywood Park ensued.

With the NFL desperate to get a team in LA after a 22-year absence, Kroenke moved the Rams there in 2016. Their temporary home was the LA Coliseum and they also played one game a season in London until 2019.

While Kroenke watched them win at Wembley, son Josh - an Arsenal director - was at the Emirates for Arsenal's 2-2 draw against Crystal Palace.

Their new stadium opened in 2020. Kroenke and the NFL settled a $580m lawsuit with the city of St Louis over the Rams' relocation last November.

The sparkling 70,000-capacity arena will be expanded to more than 100,000 for the Super Bowl. The gamble paid off, with the Rams now worth more than £3bn. They have reached the play-offs four times in the last five seasons under Sean McVay, who at 36 would be the youngest head coach to win the Super Bowl.

Asked by Sportsmail about his relationship with Kroenke, McVay said: 'In a lot of ways he's been a great mentor of mine. Guys like him are so special. He's such a great leader. I love Mr Kroenke.'

The Rams have gambled on signing the best available veteran players at the expense of dipping into the NFL draft.

That strategy will have paid off if his team wins tomorrow. With the Rams on the brink of glory in LA, Arsenal fans will wonder if Silent Stan will ever make a noise in London, too.
