DELIGHTS: Springtime daffodils (also below)

Daffodils are springing up

WORDSWORTH had a point — there's nothing half so delightful on a March day as daffodils.

A clump of daffs anchors a handful of sunshine, cheers the dreariest of days and brightens the humblest of plots.

But why do daffodils sometimes peter out after a year or two? There are several possible reasons for this.

First, it may be you planted them too shallowly.

This is especially likely if you planted out a pot after flowering, since those that are sold in bud growing in a pot are planted on the surface.

Outdoors, daffodil and narcissus bulbs need to be buried three or four times their depth — that's 3in or 4in deep for miniatures such as Tete a Tete and 6in below ground for the larger daffs such as Carlton and King Alfred.

That's factor number one. Factor number two is a dry spring, which can adversely affect flowering in the subsequent year.

To make up for this potential lack of sustenance, give your daffodils a feed when they are in flower, and water that in if no rain showers are forthcoming.

Blood, bone and fishmeal, generously scattered around each clump, will be much appreciated.

Take off faded flowers, too — not only to improve the appearance of the plants but to prevent any extra energy being diverted into seed production.

Heavy shade is another common cause of failure, along with fierce competition from tree roots.

Where daffodils are naturalised in grass or lawns, adding a few extra bulbs each year is a good habit to get into so that the food extracted from the earth by the grass does not affect their numbers.

If you are feeling short of flowers now, you can nip out and buy those budded pots from nurseries and garden centres.

But you'll have to pay a little more as the grower has potted them up, fed and watered them.

GARDENER'S DIARY

Your weekly gardening to-do list

- STOCK up on supplies of general fertiliser, thin gardening gloves, pots, seed trays, multipurpose compost and packets of seed.
- Clean up the patio using a pressure washer or a stiff broom and bucket of warm, soapy water. Scrape moss and green slime from between paving slabs.
- Replant containers with spring annuals and pots of bulbs, if the weather permits.
