LEE WESTWOOD offered a passionate rebuttal to accusations of disloyalty yesterday after confirming his intention to play in the inaugural Saudi Arabia-backed LIV Series event at the Centurion Club in St Albans next month.

Breaking his silence on the subject, the 49-year-old claimed that he was just 'one of many' players who have asked for releases from the DP World Tour -- formerly the European Tour -- to compete in the renege tournament.

Keith Pelley, CEO of the DP World Tour, sent an email to every player last month urging them not to compete in the Saudi series, arguing it posed an existential threat to the circuit he represents.

pleas have fallen on deaf ears, with the former making no bones about the fact that playing for a monstrous prize fund of $25million -- double the previous record for an event staged in Britain -- was far too tempting to resist.

'I think if I said to some of the mates I grew up playing with in Workshop that I have the opportunity to play in a 48-man tournament offering $25m, they would take me to one side and say, "What exactly is there to think about?"' commented Westwood.

'This is my job. I do this for money. It's not the only reason for doing it.

'But if anyone comes along and offers us a pay rise, you have to seriously consider it.'

Westwood hinted that he will also play in the other seven events scheduled worldwide by Saudi frontman Greg Norman, with five of them taking place in America. It would lead to a ban from the PGA Tour but, at this stage of his career, that is clearly something Westwood (above) can live with.

Dunne leaves IABA performance role

BOXING

FORMER world super-bantamweight champion Bernard Dunne has confirmed that he has resigned from his role as the Irish Athletic Boxing Association's (IABA) high performance director. The news wasn't unexpected as the Dubliner had been on extended leave since the Tokyo Olympics, where Irish boxers won a gold and bronze medal. Dunne took up the role in 2017 and oversaw a difficult period in Irish boxing, as the sport recovered from the disastrous showing at the Rio Olympics and the fall-out from Billy Walsh's departure in October 2015.
