AZEM RAFIQ said he was a step nearer to 'closure' after disrepute charges were brought against Yorkshire and 'a number of individuals' over allegations of racism at the club, and the handling of those allegations.

Rafiq said the process which led to the England and Wales Cricket Board announcing the issuing of charges yesterday had been 'gruelling' for him personally, two years on from his initial allegations of racism and harassment across two stints at Yorkshire. He called for the hearings to take place in public but that would appear unlikely.

'This has been another gruelling but unfortunately necessary process,' Rafiq said in a statement.

'It has been a long two years since I went public about my experiences, but I hope this all means that no young player ever goes through such pain and alienation again.

'My preference would be for this hearing to take place publicly, but I am hopeful that we are at least nearing a point where there will be some sense of closure for my family and me,' he added.
