WE NEED THEM ALL

Exiles must wear green too

FIONA Coghlan wants the IRFU to be imaginative when awarding the 43 contracts across women's rugby next season.

Derek FOLEY REPORTS

First up, the 2013 Grand Slam winning skipper suggests the basic IRFU Ireland men's model is NOT suitable for the women's game. In particular, the banning of players not based in Ireland from the international team. There are too many Irish players already playing abroad, almost exclusively in the English Premiership. The FAI's current product and the structure of the Cricket Ireland women's contracts could be studied.

model they want to use but with regards to the contracts for Sevens and 15s, that needs to be looked at again. "While I think players can play across both codes they can't do it mid-tournament and have to be playing 15s rugby for a certain amount of time during the year. "Just taking in a couple of games and then taking them out mid-tournament, that's wrong for the development of the squad and I hope that's looked at very closely. "Obviously, the Sevens have a World Cup now in September and they are looking for qualification for the Olympics and that's been their focus.

Quality

Cricket Ireland have 21 Ireland contracts: seven are full-time for players based in Ireland; nine are educational contracts; and five are 'non-retainer' contracts, ie pay-for-play and bonuses. "We have to include players playing abroad in the 43 contracts, there is too many playing abroad to exclude them," says Coghlan. "It will be interesting as to what model they take with players based here. "That's whether it is inter-pro and they're going to be training week in, week out with a province: they might need that to entice them back to Ireland.

Quality

"The quality of players in that Sevens squad is huge, and they have been huge for the 15 squad when involved but not, as I said, by being used mid-tournament. "There needs to be a plan going forward where they're going to be used and where they are getting game time on a 15s pitch, it is an issue that has to be sorted out. "Meanwhile Ireland don't need to get too hung up about results in the two-game series, opening this Saturday, against Japan. The bigger goal is to develop the squad ahead of next season's Six Nations Eleven of the 28-strong squad picked to tour Japan, including captain Nicola Fryday, are based abroad. Continues Coghlan: "There is a huge number of them playing in the Premiership and, obviously, the IRFU have been over there and 'Talent Idd' two girls who played for England previously." There is also an urgent need to end the confusion between Seven and 15s contracts. "It depends what

"I don't think winning is huge, once we develop going towards the Six Nations, it is way more important that we finish third there and qualify for the WXV top tier later in the year.

"Japan are very much focused on the World Cup already this summer, they have five high level games under their belt and they won four of them, losing their last game to South Africa."
