Eiscir Riada

The initial sketches consist of sculptural seating ribbons, pathways and landscaping that reflects the eskers typical of geographical features in the area.

The concept of a journey is central to this work, it is a continually evolving theme in my overall work. In this work, a linear element and a sequence of carefully placed sculptures bring you on a journey where you can physically trace along and follow along a series of pieces. The symbolic linear elements will be an informal place for interaction and recreation. A linear undulating motif in the murini mosaic will echo the formations of Eskers, this will appear along the seating and the viewer can trace along this ribbon onto the boulder forms. The interaction with the work is meditative in that they can sit on and feel the texture of the mosaic. On an aesthetic level the viewer can subconsciously engage and follow the slow graduation of colours and contrasting motif.

Development, Artistic Concepts and initial visuals for proposed work

Initial concept images

The works will consist of a series of sculptural seating, these are based upon geographical features of eskers. From South Dublin geographical site reports. "The Lucan esker was formed by deposits under the ice sheet, its margin formed as the ice withdrew, the Esker includes a large accumulation of sands and gravel undulating northwards across west Dublin at the end of the last Ice Age" Included in the detailed plan there will be areas of undulation mounds/ridges in the grass areas, including planted ribbons in the landscaping. The esker forms will also be reflected in the layout of pathways. The sculptural seating will orientate people along these sinuous pathways. A gradation of colour in the mosaic and ribbon like motifs will be refined based upon further research of these geographical features. I will develop research and concepts based on feedback and work in consultation with the client. I will coordinate designs with landscapers and concrete furniture manufacturers.

The sculptural seating designs will reflect features of eskers (long, narrow winding ridges of alternately sorted material comprised of boulders and clay)

Above is an example of a drawing detail and below the final installation for bespoke curved seating in previous work. The seating would be ordered to specific design for this project. I will coordinate design and installation with the concrete furniture manufacturer. The cast concrete forms would be part of the hard landscaping seating budget, this would free up the Artist's budget for mosaic installation, concept and design collaboration and would allow the sculptural element to be more significant in scale (to command a considerable space) for a smaller budget.
